44 rue Sainte Anne, 75002, Paris, France
Open from wednesday to saturday

« Dans un lieu, une friche, sur un sol aride et infertile, le vent semble tout balayer, déniait chaque signe de cette civilisation inerte. Sous l'épais amas de poussières, des végétaux persistent, d'anastomose en anastomose, ces rameaux fabriquent par rhizomes spécieux, un filet, une nasse géante, qui déterre sans égard la mythologie souterraine d'un autre temps... »

'Weeping Sun' is conceived in parallel with a fictional work by Mathieu Buard, curator and contemporary art critic, which is being written simultaneously with the making of the works.

Xolo Cuintle imagines spaces at the border between a dream and simulacrum. In a state of latency these deserted domestic spaces concued with poor materials such as poured concrete and tin, fuse together les arts decoratifs with the italian movement of arte povera. Somewhere between furniture and sculpture, a set and an intimate space there is a continual presence of intimacy in this architecture.
